Locating A Specific Journal through OCLS
Looking for a specific journal
Possible scenarios

• You find a citation in bibliography of an article that you want to pursue.
• Your professor gives you a citation and you have to write a critique on the article, but you do not have the article in hand.
• Your professor tells you that there are journals, relevant to public affairs, that you should follow (current awareness).
You find a citation in bibliography of an article that you want to pursue.

- Looking at the bibliographies of articles is a good way to continue your research.
  - These are the sources that this author used to write his/her article.
  - Will give you “more like” the article you already have.
• Let’s say, you want to pursue this article in another article you are using.

• It is from Public Administration Review.
Use the Journal Titles Search

• From the OCLS home page, http://www.indwes.edu/ocls
• Click on: Journal Titles, under Key Links.
• Authenticate with your Library Access Number.
• Enter the journal title in the search box.
Click on: Search
Several IWU databases have the full text!

Note the dates in black.

- A closed date, means only those years.
- Embargo means not for the current year or months.
- ...to present means it should be available up to the current issue.

Click on, Wiley

Click on the right year.
You can print or save the article.
Your professor gives you a citation and you have to write a critique on the article, but you do not have the article in hand.

Your assignment includes reading this article and writing a critique of the article, but the article is not provided or a link to the article. The link is the publisher’s web site, per APA.
Again, use the Journal Titles Search!

Click on either one since they both have the right years.
